Hutt's Memorial Methodist Church, also known as Hutt's Chapel, is a small third quarter of the nineteenth century frame church that stands northwest of Snow Hill. The plain single-story gable roofed church is enhanced by a two-story pyramidal roofed entrance tower. Colored glass windows illuminate the sanctuary. A datestone fixed in the corner of the foundation is inscribed "Hutt's Memorial Methodist Church, 1871-1945." Hutt's Memorial United Methodist Church, or more simply known as Hutt's Chapel, stands on the northwest side of Red House Road in the vicinity of Snow Hill, Worcester County, Maryland. The single-story frame church faces southeast with the gable roof oriented on a northwest/southeast axis.

Built in 1871, the single-story frame church is supported on low rusticated block foundation. The rectangular frame structure is sheathed with vinyl siding and covered with a steeply pitched asphalt shingle roof. Rising on the front of the church is a pyramidal roofed entrance tower, and attached to the southwest side is a single story wing.

The southeast (main) elevation is an asymmetrical facade dominated by the two-story entrance and bell tower. The double-door entrance, filled with replacement doors, is sheltered by a gable roofed porch. The northeast side of the tower is marked by a six-over-six sash window. Plain vinyl sided walls sheath the upper level of the tower. Fixed in the southeast corner of the church foundation is a datestone inscribed, "Hutt's Memorial Methodist Church, 1871-1945." The southwest wing extends from the tower, and it is a one-bay structure marked by a large-sized six-over-six sash windows. A single flue interior end brick stack rises through the roof.

The northeast side of the church is defined by three large-sized six-over-six colored glass sash windows. The eave is trimmed with a simple boxed cornice. Rising through the side of the building is a single-flue brick chimney.

The back of the main block is a plain vinyl sided wall surface with a slightly extended eave.

The interior was not seen.

Accompanying the church is a nineteenth and twentieth century cemetery and a single story frame community hall.
